$100-Million Aid To Syria Called U.S. Peace Tool

WASHINGTON, June 4 (AP).—Secretary of State Henry Kis-linger today linked for the first time a $100-million request in the oreign aid bill to Syrian reconstruction.

He told the House Foreign Affairs Committee that while no ommitments were made to the Damascus government, he had agreed hat if the disengagement agreement with Israel was executed and torian civilians returned to the area, he would ask Congress for the $100 million. In the $4.2-billion economic assistance provisions of the foreign aid bill, the $100

EEC Agrees to Re-Examine U.K. Financial Contributions

Callaghan's Speech Is Conciliatory

By David Haworth

LUXEMBOURG. June 4 (IHT). -Common Market foreign ministers today agreed to re-examine satisfaction with the terms of its European Economic Community membership - the contributions Britain is expected to make to the community budget.

British Foreign Secretary James Callaghan, detailing his renegotiation demands, said that the system of direct payment to the budget was "fundamentally inequitable" to Britain because it insisted on the transfer of resources from one of the poorer community members to the richer ones.

By 1980, he said, British production would represent only 14 percent of the community total but the treaty of accession in its present form requires Britain to provide almost a quarter of the total budget by that date. "In these circumstances, the community is faced with an unacceptable situation," he said. Conciliatory Speech

In a lengthy but conciliatory speech—which had a tone notably softer than that of Mr. Callaghan's announcement in April that Britain intended to renegotiate its membership terms-the foreign secretary also asked for reform of the Common Agricul-tural Policy, improved trade terms with the British Commonwealth and changes in the EEC's industrial policy as the other essentials of a renegotiation pack-

He promised that "if the negotiations were successful and secure the approval of the Erithh people. we shall be ready to play our full part in constructing a new Europe." He commented in a press conference later that the British had achieved all they wanted in "I am going today's meeting. home moderately ratisfied that renegotiation march." he said.

Mr Callaghan's optimistic tone was not however, matched by the other delegations. While the French and German representatives welcomed Mr. Callaghan's more moderate approach, the new French Foreign Minister, Jean Sauvagnargues, pointedly insisted that "renegotiation is not pos-

None of the other member countries were convinced by the figures produced by Mr. Callaghan. The Irish minister went so far as to describe them as "arithmetically impossible." But he agreed, along with the Danes and the Dutch, that Britain did in fact have a case for an adjustment in budgetary contributions and that a solution to the problem was possible.

Commission Inquiry

After four hours of discussion. the Council of Ministers agreed that the EEC Executive Commission should immediately undertake an examination of the EEC's economic and financial evolution. The inquiry, which is to cover the period since the community was enlarged 18 months ago and projections from the present until 1980, is to cover all nine member nations.

After some hesitation from the French, it was unanimously agreed that this was the best (Continued on Page 2, Col. 4)

No Progress in Commons

Wilson Rejects N. Ireland Pullout lion coent in compensation for

By Terry Robards

LONDON, June 4 (NYT) .-Prime Minister Harold Wilson ruled out a British troop withdrawal from Northern Ireland today as an emergency debate in the House of Commons ended without any evidence of progress toward a solution of the political crisis there.

"There is no easy solution through the withdrawal of troops." the prime minister said, "unless this house is prepared to risk a holocaust." He vowed that British soldiers would be kept in Northern Ireland as long as they were necessary to protect the public.

Although Parliament had been recalled from its spring recess to discuss the situation in the province, two days of talks failed to produce any new proposals to resolve the crisis that resulted in the collapse of Northern Ireland's coalition government a week ago. 2-Week Strike

The Northern Ireland Executive, the chief policy-making body in the province, resigned last Tuesday following a two-weck general strike organized by Protestant extremists that had brought the economy to a state of paralysis. This led to the reimposition of a form of direct rule from London.

The Executive had represented an effort at power-sharing between the Protestant majority. accounting for two-thirds of the population in the province, and the Catholic minority.

The cost of the military force of 16,000 troops plus millions of pounds in additional direct aid and subsidies to the provincial economy have grown increasingly controversial in Britain at a time when the public is being squeezed by milation and the effect of higher oil prices. Many Britons appear to tech that Northern Ireland should be left to solve its own difficulties, capceially in light of the continuing violence that has devastated the province. Nevertheless, a withdrawal is not regarded as imminent within the government.

François Mitterrand's Socialist party has presented draft legislation in the National Assembly covering Mr. Giscard d'Eslaing's campaign promises, which range from immediate wage increases for the lowest paid to equal pay for women, lowered retirement age, increased old-age pensions, larger family benefits and aid to the nandicapped.

In the present state of the economy, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing is expected to plead for more time in implementing these reforms. And he apparently hopes his "winds of change" approach to everything from Gaullist pomp to an end to telephone tapping and his own modern public image will win him thme.

Finance Minister Giscard d'Estaing's earlier reluctance to launch an all-out attack on inflation was based on the knowledge that austerity is rarely a popular election plank, plus the unpleasant memories his "stabilization" plan left in the middle 1960s.

After his weekend meeting with West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt here, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing apparently is counting on Bonn's willingness to ease its own austerity measures. The German policy has kept inflation at 7.1 percent and produced the Common Market's only balance of payments surplus, although at the cost of all but moderate economic growth.

Basically, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing wants to make good on a precampaign exhortation to France to cut domestic spending and increase exports in order to produce a "13th month" of production rcquired to pay for oil imports.

Under consideration are such classic measures as further credit restriction, budget pruning, "toluntary" wage-increase limitations. higher interest rates to encourage savings and higher taxes.

Like the Egyptian leaders who decided to end their reliance on the Soviet Union for weapons. the military men who run Greece are clearly determined to show their independence and to demonstrate that they are not merely clients of a great power.

The American reaction has been mixed. The U.S. Embassy in Athens has been severely criticized for showing what is seen as Ends Its Aegean Oil Mission too much support for Greece's authoritarian regime, so the embassy is undoubtedly relieved that if the military ever again fires at students in the streets. as happened in November under the former Papadopoulos regime, it may be with French tanks, not American.

But there is also concern that growing independence of Greece could erode the mutual security arrangements in the eastern Mediterranean, arrangements which Washington views as maintaining the balance of power in the area.

After they took power in a coup d'état last November, the Greek leaders embarked on an expensive modernization of the armed forces. First they sought aid from the Americans, who were trying to negotiate an agreement to base an aircraft carrier at the port of Athens and station the dependents of thousands of Navy personnel here. The message was clear: Sell us what we need or we will hold up the home-port arrangement.

American proposals began to get lost in the Greek bureaucracy. The government-controlled press started giving front-page prominence to minor altercations between Greeks and American sailors. American officers complained that they were being

But Washington could not deliver what Athens wanted. EEC Agrees to Examine British Appeal on Payments A Peace Tool

The ministers saw no point in discussing political solutions to the problem until they had statistical material on which to assess whether Britain's case was justified or not. The commission will not, however, be empowered to make recommendations. It will merely report back to the EEC's foreign ministers later this year and leave them to find a solution.

The other issues which Britain wants renegotiated will be dealt with as part of normal EEC business, which Mr. Callaghan pledged today would not be held up by Britain.

"The present uncertainty in the community is not good for anyone," he said, "and I strongly believe that the EEC has to define the identity it wants-not in terms of large aspirations, but in terms of where we are all going." Nonetheless, the French promise strong opposition to Britain's renegotiation attempts. Mr. Sauvagnargues said that the EEC's budget system was central to the whole philosophy of the commu-nity and that this could not be changed merely because Britain now claimed it was inconvenient.

Mr. Sauvagnargues also told the council that although Britain now spoke with a more reasonable voice, its Labor government still held out the threat of withdrawing from the community unless it was satisfied. "An atmosphere of threat is not the sort of atmosphere in which we can negotiate," he added.

He said he was particularly pleased that Britain had undertaken not to obstruct normal EEC business during the coming months while the commission's research continues.

Nixon Abolishes Subversives List

WASHINGTON, June 4 (UPI). President Nixon today abolished the attorney general's list of subversive organizations—a list started 27 years ago-and issued orders forbidding government agencies to use copies of the list in the future.

Attorney General William Saxbe announced the presidential order. He said Mr. Nixon had acted on his recommendation. President Harry S Truman in 1947 directed the Justice Department to compile a list of organizations that he considered subversive. The number of entries grew to about 300.

Justifying his offer of amnesty, Sen. Figueroa said. "If there could be amnesty for Francisco [Pancho] Villa, whose name is now inscribed in gold letters in the National Congress, why not amnesty for Cabanas?" Villa also was a guerrilla leader.

Cabanas, 33, has become a kind of folk hero among many of the peasants in the mountainous areas of Guerrero, one of the poorest regions in Mexico. The guerrillas are fighting for social and economic change. Cabanas took over the guerrilla movement after its leader, Genero Vasquez, was killed in 1972.

The kidnapping of Sen. Pigueroa, however, may confuse many of the peasant followers of Cabanas. Although the senator is s rich businessman who owns a flect of transport trucks, he is a self-made man with a strong peasant following of his own. Secretary Butz'Plays Closely' With Pro-Nixon Group on Hill

WASHINGTON, June 4 (NYT). -Secretary of Agriculture Earl Butz said yesterday that he found himself "playing pretty closely" with those congressmen who support President Nixon. Mr. Butz's statement, made in response to questions at a news conference, was the first public acknowledgment by a high-level member of the administration of a trend that has been apparent for some time—that policies and actions by the executive branch are frequently shaped to appeal to the pro-Nixon conservative bloc in Congress. He was asked whether, in administering his department, he was under pressure from the White House to "play impeachment politics" and favor the Nixon conservatives. He replied that he

Then he praised the President at length, saying that he is indebted to Mr. Nixon and believes in him.

"I make assessments myself." he said, "as to who our friends are on the Hill." "I do not go out of my way to favor those who are against us." Mr. Butz said. He pointed out that "some of the President's best friends" are Southern Democrats who "believe in the presidency," and said, "I tind myself playing pretty closely with some of these people."

Asked if this applied to the awarding of federal grants, Mr. Butz said that it referred to the White House's permitting favored members of Congress to announce federal grants. His overall remarks indicated that he was Last Wednesday, for example, Mr. Nixon took 11 House members for a dinner cruise on the presidential yacht, the Sequoia.

He had taken another group on May 14. The group on Wednesday was composed of five Southern Democrats—Omar Burleson of Texas, Gillespie Montgomery of Mississippi, Otto Pass-man of Louisiana, Robert Sikes of Plorida and W.C. Daniel of Virginia-and six Republicans-Barber Conable jr. and John Wydler, both of New York, Edward Derwinski of Illinois, William Dickinson of Alabama. Craig Hosmer of California and Dan Kuykendall of Tennessee.

A White House spokesman said the purpose of the cruise was for the President to "get together with a group of friends" and "whatever matters the members want to discuss."

Mr. Butz, appearing before a group of reporters in the offices of the White House communications director, Ken Clawson, said that he had been traveling widely recently and had met with farmers and farm-industry groups. He said he had detected "a very strong base of support" for Mr. Nixon.

The pro-Nixon sentiment among these groups, he said, was not as strong as it was in 1972, when the President won more than 70 percent of their vote. But he estimated that support now "would go well above 60 percent,"

Booby Trap Sent Through the Mail Kills Judge in U.S.

PASCO, Wash., June 4 (AP).-Superior Court Judge James Lawless was killed yesterday when a bomb that arrived in a small package exploded in his chambers at the Franklin County courthouse, federal officials said.

Judge Lawless, 50, died after opening a box about the size of a legal stationery envelope that had been delivered by courier and handed to him by his clerk, officials said. Authorities refused to comment on the motive for the bonibing.

Jim Boldt, court administrator for the judicial district, said he did not know of any controversial cases the judge had handled. Colleagues and friends described him as a "very popular guy."

"You can think of something like this happening in Los Angeles or somewhere else, not one block from where you live." said Acting Mayor Donald Linton. "He tried to go out in the community and become known as a person as well as a judge. He was well respected.

The judge's clerk told a reporter the box was mailed to Judge Lawless and forwarded from the Benton County Superior Court in Prosser, about 35 miles northwest of Pasco, Judge Lawless, who lived here, held court in both Pasco and Prosser.

Milk, Bribery and the President

case resides in the mounting evidence of bribery-bribery that appears to have involved the President personally. The staff of the Senate Watergate committee has now compiled a voluminous report of its own investigations. That report adds to the record many details which, if true, greatly strengthen the case against the President.

It is necessary for every citizen to keep it firmly in mind that this case has not been proved, in the rigorous terms that a trial would require. No jury has delivered a verdict. The witnesses have testified under oath, but they have not yet been subjected to cross-examination in public. Not all of the documents are available to the public. This latest report was in fact leaked last Friday even before the committee had printed it. The issue is not whether the present evidence suffices to require prosecution of those involved. The answer to that question was affirmative even before the Senate committee staff's report appeared. Now it has become doubly necessary and urgent to prosecute. With respect to the involvement of the President, this prosecution will follow the constitutional procedure of impeach-

The Senate Watergate committee staff report is the third version of the milk case to have been presented to the American public. Doubts and inquiries regarding this case began long ago, with newspaper stories that led to a suit by one of Ralph Nader's groups. The sult forced the administration to produce evidence that, in turn, attracted the attention of the congressional committees investigating the scandalous and illegal financing of the 1972 presidential campaign. The first version of the milk case was the White House's response to a rising volume of accusations. It was in the form of a white paper, and appeared early last January. It acknowledged that Mr. Nixon was aware, in a general way, of the milk lobby's pledge of $2 million in campaign contributions when he overrode his own secretary of agriculture to raise the milk support price in March, 1971. But, the white paper argued, he was only responding to the needs of the dairy industry in the conventional manner of American politics. !! emphasized that Mr. Nixon was not influenced in his judgment by the campaign contributions.

The second version of the case came from the House Judiciary Committee a month ago. As part of its impeachment inquiry it is seeking presidential tapes and documents bearing on the milk-support decision. To substantiate its demand for that evidence,

The extraordinary importance of the milk it produced its own chronology of the events surrounding the increase. That chronology made the highly interesting point that two days lapsed between the President's decision to raise the subsidy and the public announcement of it. According to the House Judiclary Committee, in this interim period of two days the White House required the milk lobby to reaffirm its $2-million pledge and, in fact, the lobbyists actually delivered

Now the staif of the Watergate committee, which has been carrying on its own inquiries. contributes a much more detailed recital of the whole affair. The most striking new fact is the assertion that the public announcement was conditional on the renewal of the $2-million pledge. That assertion, according to the staff report, is contained in the sworn testimony of Herbert Kalmbach, who was then the President's personal lawyer and a leading fund raiser for his re-election campaign. The public announcement of the increased milk support price. Mr. Kalmbach told the Senate investigators. "was, in fact, linked to this reaffirmation of the $2-million pledge. . ."

Political bribery is the crime of buying and selling official actions. In this case the official action was the raising of a support price-a favor that brought the dairy farmers at least several hundred million dollars, a burden which was shared by the government and American consumers. The distinction between a legal political contribution and a bribe involves motives. If a contributor thinks that he is buying a specific favor, and if a politician lets him think so, both are guilty of bribery. The Kalmbach testimony suggests that the higher price supports were contingent, in the crudest and most explicit terms, on the milk lobby's promise to pay.

Impeachment is a solemn proceeding with vast consequences. Some members of Congress have come to believe that a president can be impeached only if there is evidence that he has committed a crime, and only if the crime is an impeachable offense. Those congressmen will want to follow the milk case with particular attention, for bribery is a crime under long-established federal law and it is an impeachable offense under the Constitution. Congress is now required to look both backward and forward. It must look backward to the President's actions three years ago to determine whether he has in fact forfeited the right to hold office by committing the crime of bribery. It must then look forward to future elections, and the protection of American politics against men who would buy and sell public policy.

menace to the future of people and the survival of a habitable planet. The nuclear arms race is the most hideous example of the danger of technology careening out of man's control.

But even if a nuclear war is avoided, technology in much smaller and less spectacular ways threatens to have terrible consequences. An example of this quiet and gathering threat is the fleet of huge oilcarrying supertankers. It is doing grave damage to the world's oceans, damage which If not soon halted will become irreversible.

In a brilliantly detailed and powerful account in the New Yorker magazine for May 13 and May 20, Noel Mostert describes the sudden rise in importance of huge tankers and the unforeseen consequences.

As recently as the end of World War II, the largest tanker was only 18,000 tons. About a decade ago, 100,000-ton tankers began to make their appearance. With the closing of the Suez Canal during the sixday war of 1967, supertankers really came into their own because the bigger the tanker the more economical the long journey from the Persian Gulf around the Cape of Good Hope to Europe. There are now dozens of tankers in the 200,000-to-250.000-ton range. with others up to 1.25 million tons under construction or under serious consideration.

The enormous size of these ships and the fanid increase in their number have caught most of the world unawares. They have created the equivalent of traffic jams in certain critical ocean passageways such as the English Channel and off the stormravaged coast of South Africa. Inevitably, as with automobiles on crowded American highways, accidents are sure to occur on the ocean, spilling tens of thousands of gallons

Because these ships are so huze, there are fewer than a dozen ports in the world-and none in the United States-that can accommodate them. When they begin to leak or otherwise need repairs, these supertankers may so weeks before reaching an

THE WASHINGTON POST.

These ships are built to make money and not for maximum salety. They have shown a high rate of structural failure, frequently breaking up in heavy storms. Since their owners amortize them over the relatively brief span of 10 years, the situation is sure to worsen. As the tankers age, they will be sold to marginal operators.

Oil is the worst single pollulant of the oceans. It smothers phytoplankton, the tiny plants that are responsible for photosynthesis and therefore for 90 percent of the ocean's living material. Oil kills fish and fish eggs. Oil coats the wings of seabirds, mating it impossible for them to fig. By disrupting the phytoplankton-fish-bird cycle, oil spills have an incalculably adverse effect on the balance of nature.

Millions of human beings depend for life upon the nutrients fished from the oceans off the west coasts of South America and Africa, These nutrients are created by nature in the key but incredibly rich waters. off Antarctica and carried north by ocean currents. When Half a Loaf Is Better

By C. L. Sulzberger

PARIS-It is hard to realize that 30 years have already gone by since history's largest armada landed an Allied army in Normandy, breaching the defenses of Hitler's Fortress Europe and launching what Gen. Eisen-hower called "the great crusade toward which we have striven these many months."

Many of the dreams accompanying the primarily U.S.-British detachments over steep hedgerows and through green pastures have long since vanished. More than half the populations of most lands involved have been born since that famous June 6 known as D-Day.

Only a few of the leading cenerals who took part are still alive: that great field commander. Omar Bradley: Bernard (Lord) Montgomery, alone with his memories in Hampshire; and Hans Speidel. German Marshal Rommel's chief of staff, now retired in the Rhineland, having lived on to command French, British, American troops himself on behalf of NATO.

Changes

It is difficult to recall how the whole rich soil of Normandy was churned up and its towns torn apart when today regarding that same placid area with its rebuilt monuments and cities, its greenciad ruins, its chomping cows and purling trout streams, menaced not by war but by pollution, But, with all Europe, it has chanzed.

The soil itself is not different but scientific and political explo-sions since World War II have ieft a far greater mark than the military explosion which brought the conflict to an end, Few of the statesmen who arranged for Europe's 1944 liberation would recognize the Continent today.

Four great overseas empires-British, French, Dutch and Belgian—have broken up since Elsenhower launched his "crusade." The only significant agglomeration remaining Portugal's is in the process of decomposing. And the ranking of nations by strength and influence has entirely altered. Today there is no such thing as a great power. There are superpowers, the United States and the Soviet Union; and there are lesser forces, not easily measured in a statistical sense, like the inchoate European Community, a newly dynamic China and burgeoning Japan. Despite Churchill's efforts to cling to British grandness and those of De Gaulle to revive French grandeur, their attempts were eranescent.

The old order of pomp and precedence has shifted. Dozens of new or recreated; countries are playing an ever-increasing part in world affairs: India, Indonesia. Zaire, Nigeria, The UN itself has already outlived its predecessor, the League of Nations, which was deformed and crippled at birth by America's fatiure to participate.

The saddest and most dangerous result of the situation brought about by D-Day and its consequent drive toward westward... advancing Soviet proops was crein its wake, has produced political schizochrenia.

Before World War II only Ireland, that tortured land, was politically split. But since Hitler's for hum?" To which the can"Thousand-Year Reich" and the didate's supporter flashed back: Japanese wariords "Greater East Asia Coprosperity Sphere" crumpled, the following units have been torn apart:

India, which now comprises three states (including Pakistan and Bangladesh); Vietnam and Korea (divided into North and South); Germany (walled and fenced into ideological fractions); and Palestine (an administrative area mandated to Britain by the League of Nations), now split among Lirael and its Arab neigh-

The greatest sundering however, not national but continental. Europe is riven in two parts according to political philosophy. The Communist East, bound to the Soviet Union by military and economic ties (with the wavering exceptions of Yugo- seal is not to be placed on a slavia and Albania) has yet to united world as conceived in arrange a formal modus vivendi with what is left of the largely democratic West, reliant on the United States.

Few men 30 years ago were far-sighted enough to perceive that where the Allied armies would meet along a zigzag line from the Baltic to the Adriatic, they would be establishing durable political zones

Churchill indeed, was aware of this possibility as were the French and the Poles. But Roosevelt, with his American traditions of confederal continents, prevailed because of his overweening military might.

The world recognizes war is now genuinely too dangerous to contemplate and therefore, at last, is getting down to the job of sealing a formal peace on events begun three decades ago. That is the aim of the Geneva Conference on European Security. The UN's very title. Europe accepts division now that the two superpowers reluctantly concinde that half a loaf is better than no pread.

India's A-Test

The report (IHT, May 23) regarding Canadian help to India for the development of nuclear energy is somewhat misleading. There is no doubt that Canada, like France and the United States, has helped India in this field but the impression conveyed in your report that India learned to build the nuclear reactor in the 1960s from Canada, is incorrect. As is well known, India built its own research reactor in 1956.

It is also well known that India designed and built unaided plutonium separation plant in the early 1960s. It is not correct to imply that India used "Canadian plutonium" in the recent nuclear experiment.

No Living God I have noticed that several times you have referred to the Chogyal of Sikkim as "a living god." He has, in truth, never at any time in his country been considered "a living god." There is a theory in Sikkim that he may be the reincarnation of saintly uncle of his but this is not at all the same thing. I have also noticed that, in reports on the recent elections in Sikkini, democracy is described as "making its bow" and the elections are claimed as "the first ever." Democracy has been making regular bows in Sikkim since 1949 when there was a general strike in Gangktok, the capital of Sikkim and the "first election ever" was, to the best of my recollection, in 1953, I was in the area in 1958 when the second elections were held and remember there was slanderous-and much enjoyedherkling. One candidate had a foreign wife and a heckler demanded: "Why did he marry a foreign woman? Aren't the women of Sikkim good enough didate's supporter flashed back: "I'll tell you why he married a foreign woman. It's because rour candidate has had all the Sikkimese women."

There was no truth in any of this but it enlivened proceedings and illustrates the distrust of foreigners natural to any comparatively remote region, (It was the same in Dorset, England. once). And this is, of course, part of the problem that the Chogyai's American wife, the former Hope Cooke, had to face, She has been very popular in Sikkim and it is only now that a campaign against any measure of independence for a country between India and China is so well under way that she comes under attack

Incidentally the Chogyal's marriage to Hope Cooke was postponed a year because 1963 was a Year of the Tiger. The present year is once again a Tiger Year-the Wood Tigerin which disasters have been prophesied for the country. These will worsen in 1976 when the Fire Dragon takes over.

Butz's statement in The New York Times editorial "Commitment to the Hungry," (IHT, May 15) that: "Hunger is relative-if your larder is empty, you cut back shows only too clearly how little he and most other over-ted Americans know about hunger. Not the hunger of having to walt another hour for a steak dinner; but the real and extreme hunger that melts flesh from starving bodies and kills small children who have never known a full stomach; the hunger that makes a quick death by disease preferable to the slow, relentless agony of starvation

The money spent in America today just on diet foods and diet aids, weight-loss programs, and reducing machines could well be used to help feed some of the hungry people of the world.

I, as one well-led American, cannot look at my own strong, healthy child without thinking of the thousands of hungry mothers in the world who, in this age of plenty, are helplessly watching their own children starve to death.

May Speed Monetary Reform

Charting Cash Flow Of Arab Oil Income

By C. Fred Bergsten

WASHINGTON.—Arab oil earnings will rise by $65 billion this year, the amounts will get even bigger in following years, the balance-of-payments positions of the consuming countries will plunge into the abyss, the international monetary system will collapse, the Arabs will buy up all our companies so goes the refrain heard frequently since the dramatic increase in oil prices in December.

There are indeed extremely serious consequences of the oil

Inflation has spiraled upward; recessions are possible if governments mistakenly cut back aggregate demand to cope with shortages of supply; countries producing other raw materials have been encouraged to emulate oil exporters; a few of the poorest countries will suffer serious deprivations, and political tensions deriving from the energy problems could intensify among countries.

No Collapse

But the international monetary situation adds relatively little to the problem. No industrial country will go bankrupt. The mone-tary system will not collapse. The prophets of financial doom simplistically compare the increase in each country's oil bill with its existing monetary reserves. They note that U.S. imports will rise by $15 billion and that its reserves are $12 billion, and conclude that the United States cannot pay even for one year.

Such observations are absurd. First, they ignore that a sizable share of the increased earnings of the oil-exporting countries will be spent on imports from the industrial world. Some oil countries will spend virtually all of their increased earnings themselves; all are rapidly revising their development strategies and military plans to do so. Some will lend their money to others who will quickly spend it.

So even the trade balances of the industrial world will not decline by more than, say, half of the increase in its oll bill this year. Those trade balances will be even better in subsequent years, as any further increases in oil countries' earnings are more than offset by their increased imports. Indeed, the United States appears to have already reached its new plateau of oil imports in April at an annual rate of $27 billion. but there was a surplus in overall trade as exports reached an annual rate of almost $100 billion. Second, the prophets of doom confuse the balance of trade and the balance of payments. They ignore the simple but central fact that the oil exporters must invest in the industrial world any of their increased earnings that they do not spend. The Arabs will not bury the money in the ground. Thus, there can be no deficit in the balance of payments of the industrial world as a whole.

Trade Surplus

To be sure, the flow of money from the Arabs will not necessarily go to individual industrial countries in amounts that precisely match the decline in the trade balance of each. Some industrial countries may wind up with a sizable surplus; others may have deficits. But this problem is solvable solely through action by the industrial countries themselves to recycle the money to where it is. needed. Much financial recycling will take place through normal market forces. Some can be handled by government borrowing in the private capital markets. The Eurocurrency markets

-those that lend a variety of currencies from European centers-have grown as rapidly in several past years as they will have to grow now, and the U.S. capital market is now fully available with the abolition of controls. Together, they can handle the vast bulk of the money on their

But it is I doubtful that the Arabs wi to promote monetary insta by shifting their funds place to place. Senate Panel Backs Plans For A-Arms

By Michael Getler

WASHINGTON, June 4 (WP). The Senate Armed Services Committee has given an unusually strong endorsement to the controversial nuclear-weapons derelopment projects sought in next rear's military budget by Secrehary of Defense James Schles-

In words that appear aimed as much at Moscow as at the rest of the Congress, the Senate panel said that in authorizing the projects "the committee intends to demonstrate, with unresolve never to allow the Soviets. to obtain strategic superiority."

Two years ago, the committee rejected a Pentagon request for funds to improve the accuracy of its ballistic missiles. But this year, after hearing descriptions of the Soviet Union's efforts to modernize its already larger missile force, the committee en-dorsed the Pentagon's proposals.

The projects a committee report says, "create the most compelling incentive for Soviet restraint in the technological exploitation of its numerically superior strategic forces and for a genuine effort to conclude a stabilizing SALT-2 agreement." Greesing Game

- The committee's remarks on this issue are viewed as especially important during the guessing game going on in Washington and probably in Moscow about whether Congress will back up Mr. Schlesinger's pledge to "match" Soviet weapons develop-. - ment if there is no substantive agreement to halt the deployment of more sophisticated nuclear

Along with backing plans to improve the accuracy of U.S. project, because it might make them able to knock out Soviet missiles in their silos—the committee endorsed development, but not deployment of a line of missiles to be fired from bombers. ships and submarines. It also approved work on a new mobile land-based mussile.

The committee's report deals with the $23.1-billion portion of the defense budget covering weapons, research and manpower for fiscal 1975.

Two weeks ago, the committee trimmed this request to $21.8 billion, although leaving the strategic programs basically intact. The full committee report was only recently released and the bill went to the Senate floor yesterday for debate.

Final Wording

Still unresolved by the conferees, however, is the final wording of language that would restrict the power of the President to impound runds appropriated by Congress.

Senators and representatives have said that if the legislation is passed. President Nixon is expected to sign it, even though it. is a product of Congress and not the White House.

The House and Senate previously passed similar budget-control measures by wide margins. But the conferees met only once, in April, to begin reconciling differences in the two bills. Since then, however, the statis of the Senate and House have worked steadily to put logether a nearly complete bill for the conferees to approve.

The measure is an outgrowth of disputes between Congress and the President over the impoundment of, or refusal to spend, funds appropriated by Congress as well as frustration in Congress over the way the House and Senate now deal with the budget.

Under the current law, in order to have money spent, Congress must pass two separate pieces of legislation. An appropriations bill provides the money from federal venues and an authorization bill provides the authority to spend the money for the stated purpose. The appropriations bill usually originates in the Appropriations Committee while the authorization measure originates in the committee that deals with the area in which the money will be spent.

The new legislation, among other things, would do the fol-

Introducing the Airbus. Extravagant on comfort. Stingy on fuel.

The Airbus is a remarkable aircraft combining two advantages never before present on short flights: maximum comfort and large capacity.

The Airbus gives you lots of legroom, more than you've ever had on short flights. It has great big doors, spacious entryways, two wide aisles. And because there's twice the cabin baggage space, you can carry aboard larger bags than ever before.

Even a large suitcase of 45 by 37 cm is permitted, and it stores conveniently in an enclosed space over your seat. Throughout the Airbus, seating is arranged so that you're never more than one seat away from an aisle. You can even choose to sit in a no-smoking section if you wish. In fact, every detail down to the lighting and air conditioning has been conceived with your comfort and convenience in mind.

One of the Airbus' greatest advances is its engines. They're the quietest jet engines ever developed. And moreover, they use a lot less fuel than previous jets. With the Airbus large capacity, there's a tremendous saving on fuel per passenger.

So when you fly the Airbus, go ahead and enjoy its extravagance on comfort. It's justified by its stinginess on fuel.

Korea Lepers Bravely Accept New Grief: Giving Up Children

By Richard Halloran

OHJON, South Kores (NYT). —Chin Wu Bum left the construction gang he had been helping and walked up the dirt road to his small cinderblock house to get his two daughters.

The three of them came back, hand in hand, the girls skipping and laughing in the warm spring sun, then stopping at the sight of a stranger and hugging their father's legs in shyness.

Mr. Chin admonished them, but gently. Soon he will no longer have the two little girls with him. In September, Mr. Chin and his wife, both lepers, will send their children to America, probably never to see them again. The two girls, Jun Sook, 5, and Hae Sook, almost 3, are to be adopted by an American family in what is thought to be the first plan of its kind, Operation Outreach, announced early this spring. Mr. Chin's daughters, with six other children of lepers here, are being sent away in an effort to rescue them from a life of almost certain misery

Mr. Chin was asked how he and his wife felt about voluntarily giving up their girls. He brushed away the trace of a tear, then sald:

"We feel pain in our hearts, of course. But if we keep them here, we would really block their future and we will only be a burden on

Mr. Chin, his disfigured hands behind him, said: "So we thought it better to let them go to good foster parents in America and to live with ordinary people. Our wish is to have our children live as human beings."

Arranging for the eight children to go to live in Long Island and Putnam County, New York, and Washington, D.C., has taken two years and has not been easy. The main question in the United States has been whether the children of lepers carry the disease. The best medical advice says they do not.

Leprosy is classified as the least contagious of communicable diseases. Only 5 percent of the ceptible to the leprosy bacillus, and then only after prolonged and close contact with an infected person. There is no evidence that the susceptibility is inherited.

The Rev. Lee Kyong Jal, the head of St. Lazarus Village, where the children and their families live, said of the parents: "I know they will suffer to have their children leave their sides. But what is the meaning of true love? The children some day will re-turn their parents' love for giving them a chance to have a real Father Lee said that "of course" it is unnatural to give away children. "But to keep the children captive in these sad circumstances is something we should not do," he said.

The fundamental reason behind Operation Outreach is that lepers in Kores, as in many other countries, are outcasts, despised by other Koreans and forced to live apart all of their lives, Their children are penalized for the illness of their parents, even though they are as healthy as other Korean children. Koreans afflicted with the lisease are estimated to number 80,000 of which about 400, including 126 children, live here in St. Lazarus Village. There are

111 families here. The biggest difference between the lepers and other Koreans is that the lepers have no hope that their affliction will disappear, that they will be accepted by their neighbors or that their standard of living will improve

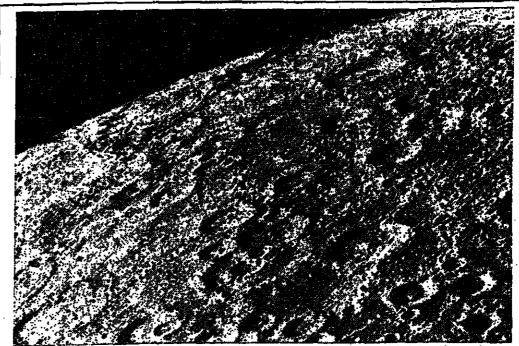

Garment Strike

Continues in U.S.

NEW YORK, June 4 (AP).—A nationwide strike of 110,000 garment workers at 750 factories in 30 states will continue at least until tomorrow, when negotiators might gather in Washington to resume contract talks

Murray Finley, president of the striking Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, said yester-day he would go to Washington tomorrow or Thursday at the suggestion of W. J. Usery jr., director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. The workers are seeking a $1.10 in-crase in their hourly wage.

Clothing Manufacturers Association, representing the owners of the plants, has said it would go anywhere at any time to resume the talks that collapsed here Saturday, prompting the strike call. Hanging in the balance are shipments of the fall line of clothing for men and

UN Study Says at Least 1 in 10 U.S. Aide Denies Suffering From Malnutrition

ROME, June 4 (AP).—At least 400 million persons, about onetenth of the world's population, are suffering from malnutrition, a . UN report says.

The report, background material for a world food conference here later this year, urged "a world-wide effort to bring about a better balance between growing world demand and supply."

It called for faster expansion of agricultural output in devel-oping countries, huge investment to harness physical resources, sub-stantial expansion of food aid programs and creation of national food reserves.

Tracing the food crisis, which is especially acute in Africa's sub-Sahara zone, to the "disastrous" harvests of 1972, the report said: "History records more acute shortages in individual countries, but it is doubtful whether such a critical food situation has ever been so worldwide."

Warning on Future It said good harvests expected this year could partly replenish cautioned: "It will take more than one good season to bring them back to safe levels. At the same time, a shortfall in some areas cannot be ruled out." The report underlined an increasing disparity between supply and demand in poorer countries. It estimated cereal demand in nonindustrialized nations would to 900 million in 1985, leaving almost 10 percent of total cereal needs in 1985 to be filled by

But even present import levels, the report said, "in present trade conditions and at present price levels cannot be maintained for long without adverse consequences on their development programs." Undernourished

Turning to malnutrition, the report said "conservative" estimates put the figure of "significently undernourished" persons in underdeveloped countries at 400

It noted, however, that "an enormous reservoir of production potentialities—physical, biological and human—remains untapped."

About 140 nations are expected. to attend the world food con-

Any Secret Pact With N. Vietnam

WASEINGTON, June 4 (NYT). -The State Department denied yesterday that the United States nad made secret commitments to North Vietnam as part of the Vietnam settlement.

Department spokesman Robert Anderson was asked about an article in the current issue of Foreign Policy magazine that said commitments had been made but not carried out.

Mr. Anderson said: "We didn't make any secret agreements. There are no secret understandings in the sense of secret com-mitments." He added: "But there are statements on both sides of intentions. None involve added obligations on the part of the United States, but some interpreted formal agreements that is, put these agreements into specific time frames.'

The article, by Tad Szulc, a free-lance writer, said that the United States had committed itself to the "removal, within a year, of all American civilians in South Vietnam engaged in supporting South Vietnamese armed

Mr. Anderson later said that he was "not asked any question about American civilians, but only about secret commitments. "Had I been asked about the civilians," he went on, "I would have answered that most civilians working with the GVN [government of Vietnam] are contract employees."

'Reign of Terror' Laid to Uganda

This production was also the principal showcase for 18-yearold Nadezhda Pavlova, who was as effusively acclaimed here as she was last fall in New York when she appeared with a touring Bolshoi group. Funniest Show in Paris: 'General Idi Amin Dada'

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss

Idi Amin Dada" (at the Saint André des Arts in broken English) is the funniest film in town. If it were fiction, it would be acclaimed as a comic masterpiece, But it is all true.

In January, 1971, Gen. Idi Amin Dada, heavyweight boxing champion of the Ugandan Army for nearly a decade and once an enlisted man in the British Army, seized power in Uganda. Establishing a military dictatorship, he ordered tens of thousands of Asians holding British passports out of the country. As they controlled the economy, things have been in a financial muddle ever since. Complete bankruptcy has yet to come; the general predicts that prosperity is just around the corner if everyone will pull his weight.

Last year he invited a Swiss film maker, Barbet Schroeder, to Uganda to draw his portrait on the screen. It is actually an autoportrain for the general speaks with refreshing candor about himself, his policies and his aims as he conducts reporters on tours of his realm. Nor is the fun one-He often chuckles as heartily as any spectator as in his fluent but incorrect English he delivers startling pronouncements.

An indefatigable dispatcher of telegrams, some of his messages have become world famous. He wired Edward Heath to send an aurolane to collect vegetables and bananas for the starving English. No answer has been forthcoming.

The camera rests on the fidgety minister of foreign affairs who is tickling his nose with a pencil. A commentator explains that this unfortunate official was subsequently executed. The general complains that Henry Kissinger is forever visiting weak leaders instead of coming to see him. But all is not politics. We have glimpses of his home life for he is a firm family man, believing woman's place is in the house, though he thinks efficient housewives would make excellent hotel managers. Export Aids Threaten Trade War

By Edwin L. Dale Jr. WASHINGTON, June 4 (NYT). The next trade war will be a war of export subsidies." With that remark, a high trade-official expressed a growing concoming to a head on the issue of efforts to promote exports by various governmental subsidies and possible retallatory efforts by importing nations, including the

For the United States the key issue is the 80-year-old "countervailing duty" law, which has been largely ignored by the Treasury over the years but is now the subject of several lawsuits seeking enforcement of it.

The law declares that medal duties must be imposed when foreign governments bestow a "bounty or grant" on goods they export. The uncertain meaning of these terms has been an excuse for the Treasury to move slowly or not at all in acting on complaints by U.S. industries claimhe unfair competition from subsidized foreign goods.

In one lawsuit, the U.S. dairy industry has already won a preliminary victory in an effort to force the secretary of the Tressury to impose countervalling duties on dairy-product imports from the European Common Market. These products are openly subsidized under the community's common agricultural policy.

Strong pressure in the same direction has been exerted on Setretary of the Treasury Wil-liam Simon by three dairy-state members of the Senate Finance Committee, and Mr. Simon has given a somewhat ambiguous piedge that "all necessary action will be taken to enforce the law." However, officials feer that the beginning of general application of countervailing duties by the United States could set off a kind of trade war. Already, the single most contentions issue between Brazil and the United States involves a pending countervailingduty proceeding on shoe imports from Brazil. The matter came up several times, including in Colombia, during the recent trip to Latin America by William Eperle, the President's special representative for trade negotiations

The gradual activation of the law in the last three or four years even though the special duties have actually been applied in few cases-has aroused concern in numero other countries, in--cluding a growing number of less developed countries that export manufactured goods.

According to some officials, a literal application of the law would make it apply even to the alleged subsidy effect of the "value" added tax, "which is widely used in Europe and is rebated on exports. If this interpretation were to be adopted, there would be an automatic duty increase on nearly all U.S. imports from Europe.

New Rules Sought The administration has declared its desire for international negotiation of a new set of ground rules on which subsidies are legitimate and which are not. The latter would be subject to countervalling-duty action.

The administration's trude bill that has passed the House and is pending in the Senate contains a special section on the countervailing-duty law. It would seek to require more vigorous and more rapid enforcement, but would give the secretary of the Treasury discretionary authority not to impose countervailing duties for four years if international negotiations on the issue were under way.

On the other side, a number of foreign countries have complain-ed that the United States is, in effect, subsidizing all its exports by the tax change enacted in 1971 setting up authority for domestic international sales corporations a device to defer corporate texes on profits from

Lockheed is supposed to obtain these orders by the planned Nov. 30 closing date for the transaction. Lockheed currently has firm orders, including 74 planes already delivered, for 135 TriStars, indicating it must attract 45 additional firm orders by the deadline. It also holds deposits on 67 "second buys." 'There's no way on earth that Lockheed is going to get 45 more firm orders over the next six months in the current airlineindustry climate. It's an impossible task." said one aerospace company executive.

"I just can't believe that any realistic analysis of the market could have led to imposition of such an unreasonable number of newly firmed orders as a condition," said an airline official.

Fuel Costs Cited

A number of industry sources granted that the potential exists for sufficient orders but said that their skepticism is based on the unlikelihood of persuading airlines to place orders now while they are operating under severe restrictions forced by soaring fuel and other costs and a sluggish or declining traffic pattern in many key sectors. I think the possibilities are there, but I can't reasonably see how they expect to do it," said an executive with a rival aircraft-making company. For his part. Textron's Miller, while conceding the condition is tough, defended its fairness: "It seems to me that expecting about two-thirds of them (the existing options) to come in to firm orders seems quite reasonable." he said. 'It's going to be difficult. I'm confident it can be

Difficulty Seen

An analysis of the current list of nine airlines holding the 67 options indicates the condition will be troublesome, however.

The largest option holder is Eastern Air Lines with 13. But a senior executive of Eastern, which is just starting to recover from a record $51-million loss last year. says he does not anticipate any decision on switching these to firm orders prior to Oct. 1, 1975, the first option deadline involved. "I think our bankers would shoot us if we dared have any thoughts otherwise," he said.

The next two largest L1011 option holders are Delta Air Lines with 12 and Trans World Airlines with 11. A Delta spokesman said his airline's first option date is Oct. 31, 1975. "We can't say whether we'd be interested in firming any orders earlier-we haven't been contacted about it."

A TWA spokesman said his airline does not anticipate any decisions on additional firm L1011 orders will be made before next

Prices Surge on Big Board As Pace of Trading Quickens

March 14.

NEW YORK, June 4 (Reuters), -Fueled by hopes that the prolonged rise in interest rates may be at an end, prices forced ahead for the second consecutive session on the New York Stock

The optimism surfaced yesterday, when First National Bank Chicago, the tenth-largest, sliced its prime interest rate to 11.6 percent from 11.75 percent, the first reduction in the key rate in three months. In addition, after the market closed yesterday, a small Southwest bank cut its prime rate to 11.25 percent from 11.5 percent. Semiconductor stacks, however, continued to buck the general upirend in the market. Some industry analysts attributed weakness in the group to a report that Fairchild Camera & Instrument Corp. has issued an internal edict to its managers to limit inventories to a six-week level. Fairchild Camera officials were not immediately available for comment. But the company's stock, which dropped 1 1'2 points yesterday, continued to lose ground today. According to a report in a trade journal, Fairchild Camera has informed some suppliers that it is putting them on "hold" for inventory adjustments and that the hold may last until the end of the year.

The trade paper added that some suppliers believe that an extended hold may mean a decided softening in some product

Bankers Said to Resist Loans to Nations

WASHINGTON, June 4 (AP-DJ:.—European bankers are showing "increasing resistance" to the efforts of governments to finance oil imports through big Eurocurrency loans, the World Bank reports.

The agency said the industrial nations, led by France, Italy and Britain, tapped the Eurocurrency market for about $10.55 billion "publicized" loans in the first quarter of this year. Such borrowings by the developed nations totaled only about $12.01 billion during all of 1973. The developing countries, including Mexico and the Philippines, also rushed into the Eurocurrency market in the first three months of this year to borrow $2.89 billion, twice as much as during either of the first two quarters of last year.

British Reserves Fall $36 Million In Latest Month

LONDON. June 4 (AP).... Pritain's official reserves backing the pound sterling fell by $36 million in May despite heavy borrowing abroad, the Treasury announced today. At the end of the month, total reserves in gold, convertible currencies and special drawing rights in the International Monetary Fund stood at $6.9 billion, the Treasury announcement added. The drain on reserves in May would have been worse, about $160 million, but British public agencies borrowed $124 million abroad during the month. Despite the drop in the reserves, the pound sterling held (irm in foreign exchanges. The pound is "steady as a rock." one dealer said. It was worth $2.39 on the London market today.

"The length of time it took to market some loans suggests that by the end of the quarter (March 31, 1974), there was increasing resistance in the banking community to continue lending at the narrow margins over the interbank rates at which most of these loans were made," the World

The appraisal of Eurocurrency lending was prepared by the World Bank's international economy division, but the International Monetary Fund decided to give the study wider circulation by publishing it in the IMF survey, issued yesterday.

Among the industrial nations. "over 80 percent of the borrowing was done by governments and public agencies, or guaranteed by them, in many cases to support the balance of payments of the borrowing countries," the World Bank study said.

The largest borrowers were Britain ($3.5 billion); France ($2.5 billion) and Italy ($2 billion). "Although the United Kingdom and Italy had extensive recourse to the Euromarket in 1972, the French public sector had not previously contracted loans of this type," the international agency noted. Austria, Denmark, Ireland and other industrial countries also turned to the Eurocurrency market for loans in the first three months of 1974. Interest Rates Rise

The demand for Eurocredits. which usually involve loans by banks of dollars on deposit outside the United States, was re-crease in borrowing by developed countries during the first quarter, the share of lending to developing countries fell to 21 percent from 40 percent in 1973." the report said. Eurocurrency loans also appeared to be a good idea to some of the Communist countries that are not members of the World Bank or the EMF. For example, the World Bank study showed that Bulgaria obtained $85 million in Eurocredits during the first quarter of 1974; Poland, $78 million; Cuba, $59.3 million; and Hungary, $50 million.

Rubber Firm Expects Smaller Loss Continental Gummiwerke AG will again show a loss for 1974 but the result should show an improvement from 1973, when group net loss rose to 43.396 million marks from a loss of 41.745 million marks in 1972. Carl Hahn, chairman, says 1974 will again be a difficult year, especially in view of the situation on the world automobile market. Sales rose 22 percent in the first four months, however, and a similar rise is expected for the whole year, he adds, noting that the company's profit situation improved a little during the first four menths from the year-earlier

U.S. Auto Production Off 22%

U.S. automobile production for May was 22 percent less than for the corresponding period last year, according to reports from the four major U.S. menufacturers. Output totaled 729,857, a drop of 210,556 from May 1973's 940,413. Production at General Motors Corp. was off 29 percent, at Chrysler Corp. 19 percent and at Ford Motor Co. 14 percent. American Motors Corp. showed an increase of 6 percent. For the first five months, total output this year was 3,195,903, off 29 percent from last year's 4,491,918.

Fiat Raises Domestic Prices Fiat has announced an average 13 percent rise in the domestic price of its models. The move is expected to be followed by the two other big Italian auto makers. Alfa Romeo and Leyland Innocenti, the first a state company and the second controlled by British Leyland Motor Co. Fiat says the new rise—the fourth in 18 months -applies to all Fiat cars and those of its subsidiary, Autobianchi. The increase was decided after the interministerial price committee failed to oppose within 60 days demands for price increases filed by Piat in April. At the time of the demand Fiat said that rises were essential to cover rocketing costs of raw materials and higher costs of manpower.

Japan Firms in Ghana Venture

An Aluminum Resources spokesman says the group plans to start a feasibility study on the project within six months. The project is expected to cost from $400 million to $500 million, and the smelters will produce 100,000 tons of aluminum metal a year in the first stage. Output will be doubled in the second stage, the timing of which has not yet been fixed. The five gluminum smelters are Nippon Light Metal Co., Sumitomo Chemical Co., Mitsubishi Chemical Industries Ltd., Showa Denko KK, and Mitsui

THIS is the sort of book that effects, it no longer exists as gives pot-smoking a bad name and sociology a worse one. Its two authors have a justified reputation for good sense: Dr. Berke is a vigorous unorthodox psychiatrist and Mr. Hernton wrote the short, sharp, enlightening "Sex and Racism." Their intentions were admirable: to produce a firsthand account of the effects of mari-juana and hashish on the human personality as an antidote to the mass of myth and prejudice produced by most official investigations of the drug and its users. Alas, the result is not the cool scientific study the book claims. but pro-pot propaganda of a medicine-show salesman vulgarity-cannabis as the universal panaces. You want beauty? "An awareness of beauty is an es-sential ingredient of the cannabisenriched experience." You want religion? "The cannabis expe-rience moves many users towards a concern with the essential issues of Life, Humanity and Existence. On these occasions, getting high takes on a spiritual significance, and a religious significance too." Sex? We got sex: "A characteristic effect of pot is to enable people to feel closer to each other and therefore to love and make love with greater depth, enjoyment and meaning." All this would be forgivable—pot can provide pleasurable experiences and there's no harm in saving so-if the authors had not made a larger claim for their work, developing what the blurb calls "a new and scientifically ac-curate method of analyzing human experience," which they, in turn, chillingly term "a qualitative-quantitative-qualitative the-ory and methodology of investi-gating feelings, emotions, dreams and perception.

The technique is called "content analysis" and the authorshope that other social scientists will use it in the future. It is in this, and not their paean for pot, that danger lies. And it is at this point that their study reaches a sublimity of academic absurdity rarely seen since medieval theologians stopped arguing about the number of angels that could stand on a pinhead. It is a potent satire on scientific method all the more devastating for being unconscious.

The authors' difficulty was that cannabis is a forbidden drug, so the only way they could reach its users was to distribute a questionnaire through the subculture once known as "the underground." They sent out 1,600 forms, received back 534 and based their book on 522. They then processed this material, necessarily anonymous replies to a series of questions, the most important of which was, "How does marijuana/hashish Affect you?"

The method of processing-to paraphrase their explanationinto their primary components, which were the smallest possible number of words that expressed what a person experienced when he or she turned on. These were known as "effect-units." Six or more effect-units were reclassified as "effect-categories." Thus, if at least six users said that cannable made them relax, the authors noted down the effect-category of relaxation.

While that is fine, as far as it goes, the authors insist on going one step further. They claim: "In summary, we have utilized the technique of content analysis to transform the essays into individual units of experience which we have called unit-effects. The unit-effects are facts. Once the material is in the form of unit-

BRIDGE.

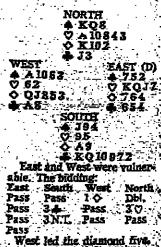

Giorgio Belladonna, for Italy, solved a tricky playing problem on the diagramed deal from one of the Italy-North America matches played during the world team championship in Venice. He played three no-trump from the South seat after West had open-ed in the third seat with one diamond. Many American players would overcall one heart with the North hand, but the Italian style is to overcall with weaker hands.

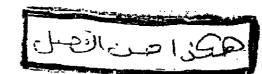

West made the normal lead of a low diamond, and Belladonna stared at the dummy for some time before starting to play. The obvious play is to play low from the dummy, making sure of three diamond tricks, but there was a eatch in this. If East produced an honor, South's ace would be forced out and he would have no entry for his clubs. The defense would hold up the club ace for one round and the contract would an alternative play was to put up the diamond king in dummy and develop clubs; while the sco-remained as an entry to the closed hand. But this play was doomed to failure, because the defense would be able to use dia-monds before the declarer could take any spade tricks.

So the obvious play was right after all. South had to hope that by the queen and the jack. 1'4 played low from dummy and we relieved to be able to win t first trick with the diamond no Then he established clubs, a, wound up with an overtrick, les ing the defense to discover the they could have dereased the tract by leading a diamond hor or a heart.

In the replay, North becan the declarer in three no-trun () and a diamond lead from to East side was faial. Italy gain 10 international match points.

Epsom Derby Favorite Is Nonoalco

By Bernard Kirsch

LONDON, June 4 (IHT).-The man who gave civilization the Mars Bar also helped produce this year's Epsom Derby favor-ite. Then he sold the yearling to the woman who helped popularize la cucaracha.

When the Derby had its first running in 1780, little did the lords and princes know that their race was destined to fall into the hands of confectionery kings and Mexican movie queens. But that's the way it's going to be tomorrow in the 195th running of the Epsom Derby, with Nonoalco the 2-1 favorite.

Forrest Mars, now retired from putting chocolate on nougat, bred Nonoalco four years ago on his stud farm in Virginia. When the yearling was put up for sale, an agent for Maria Felix Berger made a winning bid of $30,000. Tomorrow the retired Mexican movie actress. Who moved to Paris after marrying a Frenchman, has a chance to win seven times her investment. The first prize in the total purse of £132,175 ($317,320) is £89,239 ($214,149), the highest ever.

A Field of 18 Nonoalco, named by her owner after a section of Mexico City. will be in a field of 18 3-year-olds at a race course which is expected to be filled by a quarter of a million people. Among them will be several hundred Gypsies

Once the fighting was over and the Derby returned to Epsom, Piggott made it a habit of meeting the queen in the winner's circle. In his 21 Derby rides, the jockey, now 33, has had six winners and four seconds. For tomorrow's Derby, the jocker at one time or another had the mount on three favorites. Bad Day for Americans In British Amateur Golf

AP .- James Gabrielson, a Walker Cup player from Atlanta, Ga. lifted America's sagging hopes in the British Amateur Golf Championship today with a 6 and 5 victory over Scotland's Morrison Zuill in the second

But top-seeded defending champion Dick Siderowi suffera one-hole defeat against Mike Miller, another Scot. That was the darkest hour on a generally bad day for the Americans. Only 13 members of the original 47-man U.S. challenge reached the second round. This far nine of those have played secand-round matches, and five won including Gabrielson. Gabrielson played over Muirfield's 6,562-yard, par-71 layout in the best weather of the tournament thus far. Sunshine bathed the course in the late afternoon although a still fresh wind made accuracy difficult.

"I hit five birdies on the out-Gabrielson said. ward nine," "That's more than I hit since I got here." Gabrielson and Zuill both opened their match with double bogeys. But the 32-year-old American insurance broker picked off burdles at the third, fourth and fifth to move ahead. A big bunker at the short seventh slowed Gabrielson's charge. "I took four to get out of there." Gabrielson said. He stretched his lead with two more birdies and matched par at the 10th and the next three holes after that. Of the other American secondround winners, the most impressive was James Key of Columbus. Ga., who outclassed Jim Strrope of Houston, 7 and 5.

Bill Seamster, an Army private from Salem. Ore., who is stationed in West Germany, lost by one hole to Irishman Sandy Quinn after having victory in his grasp. Two up after nine holes, the 21year-old American was pulled back to square after 16 but was still playing well.

Borg first came to internations) attention in last year's French Open when he upset three strong players on the clay courts of Roland Garros stadium before bowing out.

"Borg and Nastase have to be favorites, but then there's also Stan Smith, Arthur Ashe, Jan Kodes, Manuel Orantes and a lot of others. It's just a matter of who's playing the best this week." American Eddie Dibbs said after a practice set.

Dibbs is one of five secded Americans in the tournament. Borg beat Nastase in straight in Monday's Rome-Open

Franchises, Knotty Problems On Agenda for NFL Owners

NEW YORK, June 4 (NYT) .- changes, under pressure from the displeased coaches; a new, more moderate posture to take against the players association, which threatens a strike for next month, and, of course, the World Football League.

All those subjects are related and they make for the knottlest puzzle the NFL owners have faced. At their last meeting in April, the owners awarded a new franchise in Tampa, Fla., to begin play in 1976. There has to be one more to pair with Tampa for an even total of 28. Another viewpoint: why not take in three more for a total of 30 teams, rather than leave two qualified cities to the WFL?

Risking Suit

Memphis, Phoenix and Seattle are the prime candidates, with Hopolulu the outsider. The WFL has teams organizing to play in Memphis and Honolulu and, if the NFL should move to either one, it would risk an anti-trust lawsuit from the new league. The legal action would be tenuous at best in the case of Memphis, because that city was on record as an NFL franchise candidate two months before the Toronto Northmen of the WFL moved there to become the Memphis Southmen. Mike Lynn, the earnest young man from Memphis who has actively been seeking a franchise commitment for his city since owner in the last three weeks.

1967, paid visits to every NFL

Lynn said yesterday that he had "a clear-cut majority" favoring Memphis. He will need more than a majority because the NFL byiaws require 21 affirmative votes on all actions.

The WFL remains a thorn even though its own financial projections are dismal. By signing, and attempting to sign, so many good NFL players to jump to the new league for 1975, the WFL has escalated the payroll of the average NFL club by about 50 percent. Annual salaries for a squad of 47 players are now approaching a .2 million total.

NEW YORK.—For all who are completely lost in the legal squirrel cage of Watergate, here is a concise guide that will clarify everything:

Congress had been wondering whether to impeach the President. When the President heard about this, he hired a lawyer. When Congress heard the President had hired a lawyer. Congress hired two lawyers. The President immediately hired two more, which but him ahead of

Baker Congress by a score of 3 to 2. He has been ahead ever since. The President's lawyers sent Congress's lawyers a noto contendere, which is lawyer's Latin meaning I prefer not to argue, but nobody could understand why they preferred not to argue because the explanation was written in lawyer's English. Congress's lawyers quickly countered with a mandamus a command to Amos) and a habeas corpus (do you have the corpse?).

The President's lawyers moved to overh and the Congress's lawyers countered with a subpoena duces tecum (may the dukes take them! \.

With matters at this impasse. both sides conferred in chambers with the judge to ask if he remembered what the case was about and, if so, if he would refresh their memories.

The judge said it was an impeachment-of-the-president case. The President's lawyers laughed ex parte (Ho! Ho! Ho!) and said the case was ridiculous because it was impossible to impeach a president.

Quo vadis (quo vadis?) asked the court (surely you are kid-

"You see." said the President's lawyers, "since a president can only be impeached for committing serious crimes, and since no president can be tried in a criminat court, and since, therefore. no president can be found guilty of serious crimes, there are no grounds, therefore, upon which a president may be impeached."

Katherine Anne Porter: 'I've Seen Everything'

By Henry Allen

WASHINGTON (WP).—Six or seven months ago Katherine Anne Porter bought her own coffin for $160 from a mail-order carpenter shop in Arizona. It now stands in the hall closet of her 15th-floor apartment in Prince George's County, Md.

"You see," she said, "it's a bit big for me. Would you like to take my picture in it?" She laughs. "No," she said, "that would be She bought her own coffin because she disapproves of the American way of burial. "I forbid the undertaker to touch me." Miss Porter is tiny, powerful, her fierce, violet eyes covered by thick glasses. She has survived 83 years, three marriages and divorces, a Pulitzer Prize (for her novel, "Ship of Fools"), lectures and jobs as writer-in-residence at 135 colleges, a Mexican revolution-"Two seem everything. The things I see happening now I saw happening 60 years ago. You can't surprise me.

"I was brought up in such ignorance you see. Although that had more to do with the time, which was the Victorian age, than the fact that it was the South. Such ignorance."

"I knew nothing," she went on, "so when I tried to break away, it was terribly difficult. I lived like an outcast. I nearly starved to death for years and years. I didn't know how to boil an egg properly. I addressed envelopes by hand for $2.50 a day, you see, I did that. I sold neckwear for the wonderful salary of $15 a week. But you see, if all this had not happened to me, I wouldn't have known anything about the world."

Miss Porter was born in 1890 in Indian Creek, Texas, the third of five children. Her mother died in 1892 and, a year later, her father moved the family to Kyle, Texas, to be raised by Miss Porter's grandmother, in a house full of books, on land worked by the family's

At 16, she ran away from her convent school to marry "a rich man who shut me up." She left him three years later. A year after that, she left Texas. "I didn't want to be regarded as a freak. That was how they regarded women who tried to write. I had to make a revolt, a rebelian . . . so you see, I am the great-grandmother of those bombers, and the students beating each other with bicycle

She reported for a Chicago newspaper, acted as an extra in the movies, came down with tuberculosis or perhaps broughitis, wrote drama criticism and gossip in 1917 for The Critic in Fort Worth, moved to the Rocky Mountain News in Denver in 1918, nearly died of flu, moved to New York where she lived in Greenwich Village and supported herself by ghost writing until she left for Mexico to build a revolutionary tomorrow with organizers of the labor movement. And on and on: book reviewing; arranging a Mexican folk art exhibition; winning a Guggenheim Award; publishing "Flowering Judas" in a limited edition in 1930; quarreling with poet Hart Crane; embarking for Germany in 1931, a sea voyage that would provide the setting for "Ship of Fools"; filling trunks with unfinished short stories; marrying Eugene Pressly, a member of the U.S. Foreign Service, divorcing, marrying Albert Erskine jr. of the Louisiana State University staff, divorcing again.

"It is a disaster to have a man fall in love with me." she has "They aren't content to take what I can give; they want everything from me "

Eventually she went to Hollywood to write scripts. She was "like a fox with its leg in a trap." Then she started her long trek from campus to campus, publishing "Pale Horse, Pale Rider" (1939), "The Leaning Tower" (1944). She made an enormous literary reputation but very little money.

The New York Times. Katherine Anne Porter.

"My life is so strange," she says. "It's something I have in common with Madame Dubarry, who said on the way to her execution, My life is incredible. I don't believe a word of it."

"One time in Berlin, I was probably the only American woman around, so I got invited to dinner by the correspondent for the Chicago Tribune, and the guests were Hitler, Goering and Goebbels. They all arrived late, about halfway through dinner, each with his beautiful, blond, Aryan bodyguard with a totally blank face, and each of them crippled. Goering always walked with a cane, and Goebbels had a club foot, and Hitler had sprained his foot, I believe. I thought he was the most awful, insignificant, underbred, unhealthy-looking creature I had ever seen.

"I simply could not believe he would do the things he said he would do. No one took him seriously, the same way nobody listens to these people now, the black revolutionaries and all of them. We are in one hell of a world, my dear.

"I do not understand the world, but I watch its progress. I am not reconciled. I will not forgive it." There are a store of contradictions in Miss Porter's accounts of her life-she tells one person she worked on the Dallas News, another that she didn't; she claims in one essay that she never quarreled or competed as a little girl, then details exactly the opposite in an essay, "Portrait: Old South."

These are the peccedillos of an artist, of someone who has said: "No man can be explained by his personal history, least of all a poet." These are also, perhaps, the fibs of a Southern belle, born and bred to be forgiven.

"Can you imagine that I held my own and survived with people like Gertrude Stein and James Joyce and Hemingway and that crowd?" she asks sweetly.

Katherine Anne Porter has dedicated her life to being a writer. "When I was starting out, I never said good-bye to anyone. Nobody missed me. It was wonderful. Now I get 500 to 600 requests a year to write an analysis for somebody's term paper, write letters . . . my letters are worth something now, you see. They all make me feel like I've got things in my veins . . . bloodsuckers. I wouldn't have dared send a letter to Yeats or Hardy or James. I wouldn't have had the impudence."

Gravely she points to her head. "Now I have this other thing, and I hope I die before it overtakes me. Atherosclerosis. Of course they finally discovered that I'd had emphysema too, for years. And my eyesight is going and I fell and broke a hip a few years ago. I am a cripple. I am incurable."

She shakes her head. "I would not like to die by myself. At night, alone, when I feel the attacks come on, I take that little thing (digitalis) and put it under my tongue and I go on reading. I just

Eisenhower's Private PEOPLE: Of Lord Montgomery

The late President Dwight wer, Supreme Alied Commander during World War II, characterized Britain's Field Marshal Lord Montgomery as a man who just couldn't tell the truth. Elsenhower's distike of. Montgomery, his deputy, is re-vealed in an interview that the President gave to author Cornelius Ryan on condition that the comments would not be published during his lifetime. Ryan, author of "The Longest Day," about D-Day, is publishing excerpts from his taped interview with Elsenhower in his new book, "A Bridge Too Far," to be published in London in September. According to the publisher's transcript of the interview, Eisenhower told Ryan, "I don't know what you heard in Britain but the British have never understood the American system of

Brian Montgomery, told Fred Coleman of the Associated Press, that the two men had differed over strategies in a bitter quarrel and both had been partly right, Lt. Col. Montgomery agreed that the British had never given the Americans sufficient praise-"the Americans were absolutely wonderful," he said, "Eisenhower was a great soldier and a great man." However, the colonel sided with his brother on the matter of strategy: "I do believe that he was one of the greatest military commanders of all time."

Recipient of this year's "Family of Man" award, given amnually ince 1963 by 1,700 New York City churches and 3,000 business leaders, is William Tolbert jr., president of Liberts.
